Why help others?

Many people choose to help and support other people not because of religious beliefs but as they want to make a difference to people's lives. They want to reduce people's suffering.

"You have not lived today until you have done something for someone who can never repay you."

This means that helping and supporting someone who is unable to give you something back is a fulfilling part of life. Many people like to help others by volunteering, giving to charity and supporting people in the local community.

An example of an altruist

Peter Singer is a philosopher who believes that we have a ethical duty (responsibility) to help others if we can. He is an altruist who therefore has a selfless concern for the welfare of other people. He believes that if we can afford to we have a responsibility to help others. He believes that if we look at all of the unnecessary things that we buy (new phones, cars etc) and use that money to help those in developing countries we can make a massive difference to people's lives. Singer also believes in donating money to effective charities, these are the organisations that will make the most impact for people.

He believes that you can also give up your time for charity but it can be more effective to donate money depending on how much money you are giving.

"Nineteen thousand children are dying every day. Does it really matter that we're not walking past them in the street?"

What is an altruist?

An altruist is someone with selfless concern for the welfare of other people. They may do this by being:

- Generous
- Kind
- Showing Compassion
- Volunteering
- Donating to charity

What do Sikhs believe about helping others?

Sikhs believe that we should support people in the community not only by giving money to charity but also by completing voluntary work. Sikhs believe you should give 10% to charity. Selfless service (voluntary work) for others is called sewa. Sikhs believe that to live a good life you must do good deeds and so sewa is choosing to help others within the community. Many Sikhs will choose to do their Sewa in the gurdwara. The langar is a free kitchen where many Sikhs will do their Sewa.

What do Jews believe about helping others?

Jews believe in tzedakah which means justice or righteousness. They believe that they should give 10% to charity to support those who are less fortunate. They also believe in supporting others through donations that will make people sustainable rather than relying on future donation. This is the idea of giving a man a fishing rod and not a fish.
